Incomplete photon absorption is one big drawback in solar cells with thin absorbers. Therefore, the development of advanced light-trapping schemes is one major task to reduce the optical losses. The so-called Lambertian scattering is often used as a benchmark for the application of light-trapping schemes with features that are treated by geometrical optics. In our optical ...

The bifacial gains, defined as the ratio of bifacial photovoltaic power production to monofacial photovoltaic power production, were evaluated for 1.8kW bifacial PV system with the different ground conditions and front irradiance. Among three different ground conditions, i.e., gravel, white non-woven fabric and artificial grass,

Intense pulsed light (IPL) is investigated as an extremely fast alternative contact formation process for silicon heterojunction (SHJ) solar cells. On non-metallized samples, it is proven that IPL is compatible with the temperature-sensitive heterojunction structure. Indeed, SHJ samples' initial implied open-circuit voltage of 715 mV is increased by 25.9 mV ...
