

Can figures be placed in storage cabinets

Where should action figures be stored?

If you have no choice but to display your action figures in a room that gets sunlight, I'd recommend storing your figures in a storage cabinet. That way you can keep the cabinet doors closed when there is sunlight coming in the room and open them when there is not.

Where should I display my figures?

Basically, it's a good idea to display your figures in a room that is kept at a moderate, comfortable temperature, doesn't get too humid, and gets little to no sunlight. Specifically, you don't want the sunlight hitting your figures at any point.

Should I buy a case for my figures?

You can see your figures through the glass, which keeps them shielded from excessive dust build-up in the short term. Also, some of these cases even offer a degree of UV protection. Personally, I feel that these options are too much of a hassle.

Where should I put my action figure collection?

Garages, attics, basements, and sun porches should generally be off-limits for your action figure collection due to the sunlight and/or environmental conditions. Closets are probably a good place to display them since it's highly unlikely your closet is getting any sunlight. Closets with shelves already built in are probably a great option.
