What is a windshield sun shade?

The silver is the reflective material that prevents the sun's rays from getting into the car. Some other manufacturers may use other reflective materials. Another common material is nylon. Nylon windshield sun shades tend to be a bit cheaper; however, they're not as effective at protecting the inside of your car from UV damage.

How do I choose a windshield sun shade?

Make sure that you are buying a windshield sun shade that is the right size for your car. You want something that will be able to cover your entire windshield with ease to prevent any heat or UV rays from getting inside the car. Most windshield sun shades come in sizes XXS to XXL. Some windshield sun shades are adjustable.

Do sun shades stick to windshield?

Some sun shades come with adhesives that will either stick to the side of the car or to the windshield. These adhesives prevent the sun shades from slipping, especially if you'll be away from your car for long periods of time. Accurately measure the size of your windshield before purchasing a sun shade.

Are windshield sun shades worth it?

Windshield sun shades are a product that too many car owners ignore. Most people don't think it's worth the effort of installing sun shades onto their windshield every time that they get out of the car. However, doing so could seriously prolong the life of the upholstery and equipment within the vehicle.
