Are 855 numbers a scam?

Some versions of the 855 scam also leave threatening voicemail messages demanding a return call. Unfortunately, when recipients do call these 855 numbers back, they are connected to international premium rate numbers that can charge exorbitant per minute fees. These fees range from $10-$50 per minute in some cases.

How do I identify an insurance scam?

Understanding how to identify an insurance scam can help you avoid becoming a victim. Insurance scams come in many forms and some are easier to detect than others. From auto warranty to home improvement, common scams include: Intentionally destroying property, then tricking the insurance company into thinking it was an accident.

How do I avoid a shady insurance scam?

How to avoid the scam: Before purchasing insurance, check with your state insurance department to make sure the company and agent are licensed. What it means: Shady insurance agents use cash bonuses to encourage you to use the cash value of your permanent life insurance to buy more insurance or switch policies.

Should I sign up for insurance from someone who calls me?

Don't sign up for insurance from someone who calls you. Instead, call the agent's office directly to avoid number spoofing. If you buy through an agent, verify your insurance with the company. Often, the company sends proof of insurance online or through the mail, so not receiving this proof may suggest agent theft.

How do I know if my phone number is 855?

By doing so, you can protect yourself from many of the unpleasant surprises that can arise when using the web. The phone rings once before disconnecting. You look at the caller ID and see an unfamiliar 855 number.

What should you do if a car insurance rep asks for coverage?

Stay cautious anytime you feel an insurance rep pushing for coverage you didn't ask for. The salesperson should let you sleep on the decision, so walk away and consider your options. Also, be wary if the rep wants you to sign papers without checking them over. Your lender might require you to buy collision, comprehensive or gap.
