Furniture making in America in the 19th century ranged from the small shop, like that of Duncan Phyfe in downtown New York at the turn of the century, to the huge factories of Grand Rapids and Buffalo at the turn of the next century. Phyfe was one of the rare early century cabinetmakers who actually used paper labels and tags to identify some of his work.

Short answer: How to date Paine furniture To determine the age of a piece of Paine furniture, examine its construction, as well as any labels or maker's marks. Look for dovetail joints and hand-cut nails which would suggest an early 19th century piece. Dating later pieces may require more research into the company's history and
