Who makes the solo stove?

Their company, Grapevine, Texas-based Solo Brands, makes the Solo Stove -- a backyard fire pit that the Jan brothers describe as a "virtually smokeless" campfire alternative. It's a Kickstarter success story: The stove's campaign hit its $15,000 goal in just two hours back in 2016, ultimately raising more than $1.1 million.

How much does a solo stove cost?

Solo Brands aims to make its stoves at least relatively accessible, offering a wide variety of styles, sizes and price points to entice new consumers to give the brand a shot. Stoves range from a seven-inch-wide tabletop firepit called the Mesa, priced at $104.99, to the 27-inch-wide Yukon, listed at $459.99 on the company's website.

Does solo stove have a smokeless fire pit?

Although Solo Stove makes everything from pizza ovens to grills, their star product is a portable, smokeless fire pit. These stainless steel fire pits give off very little smoke and ash by creating an environment where the fire burns super hot. This creates a secondary burn that eliminates much of the ash and most of the smoke before reaching you.

How big is a solo stove?

There are four Solo Stove sizes, and the Bonfire fire pit is Solo Stove's second largest campfire pit. It measures 19.5" wide, 14" tall (without the stand), and weighs 20 pounds. I tested it out for the first time on a crisp fall afternoon in the woods of upstate New York. As with most weekend getaways, we were a little short on time.

When did solo stove close?

After seeing a Solo Stove in action at a friend's place, my wife and I immediately ordered one of our own. We couldn't be happier! Easiest fire I have ever started in my life. Burns clean and hot, easy to maintain, and crucially easy to clean up. The fire itself is well contained and yet still very warming to everyone around it.

The Solo Stove Yukon is designed to promote airflow, which creates a more efficient burn and less smoke. The lack of oxygen and the rising hot air created by the fire pulls air through the bottom vents, bringing more oxygen into the fire pit. The air comes up through holes in the base of the pit, as well as through holes at the top.
